Management’s Discussion of Fund Performance

MARKET OVERVIEW

Once seen as unstoppable drivers of growth, many large-cap technology related stocks have come under pressure as the monetization of Artificial Intelligence (AI) has, so far, underwhelmed. This renewed market volatility has brought the realization that many portfolios — and even broad-based market indexes — are less diversified than expected. Adding to these concerns are rising geopolitical and policy risks, including the re-emergence of tariffs and heightened uncertainty around global trade.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

Despite a challenging environment, stocks posted solid gains for the year ended April 30, 2025. The EIC Value Fund (EICIX) gained 12.72%, outperforming its benchmark, the Russell 3000® Value Index, which rose 8.11%. The Fund’s outperformance was attributable primarily to stock selection and secondarily to its sector weightings relative to the index.

TOP CONTRIBUTORS TO PERFORMANCE

- The Fund’s holdings in the communication services sector led the index’s communication services stocks. (AT&T was the Fund’s top performer.)
- Stock selection in the health care and energy sectors also contributed to performance as the Fund’s holdings gained compared to decreases for the index’s health care and energy stocks. (Williams Companies and Patterson Companies were the Fund’s top performers in these two sectors.)
- The Fund’s sector weightings are principally a by-product of stock selection. Nevertheless, they added to relative performance over the trailing year.

TOP DETRACTORS FROM PERFORMANCE

- The Fund’s holdings in the industrials sector fell compared to an increase for the index’s industrial stocks. (UPS was the Fund’s worst performer.)
- Stock selection in the consumer staples sector detracted from performance as the Fund’s holdings rose less than the index’s consumer staples stocks. (Dollar General and Dollar Tree were the Fund’s worst performers in the sector.)
- The Fund’s financials holdings rose sharply but trailed the index’s financials. (PayPal Holdings was the Fund’s worst performer in the sector.)
